See what is going on outside

Applications

Sandwich panel doors without windows do not show anything of what is going on outside. In some situations it may be useful to have a choice to see for example if there is a visitor, which supplier is at the door or to see if the truck is already at the loading dock.

A door spy has a cylinder of only 12mm, but it gives 170° view on the outside premises, thanks to its fish eye lens design. From the outside it is nearly impossible to look back inside.

Easy to install

Making windows in a sandwich panel door can be quite impactful. A door spy only requires a 12mm hole in the doorleaf.

Compared to windows, a door spy has little to no impact on light admission into the building, to privacy of activities in the building or to the insulation of the inside temperature.
